SUMMARY ANALYSIS

The Florida constitution and general law place post-service employment restrictions on legislators, statewide elected officers, and appointed state officers. These restrictions prohibit these individuals from personally representing another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency. These restrictions are typically characterized as post-service lobbying bans and are in effect for two years following vacation of office. Additionally, legislators are prohibited from lobbying the executive branch for two years following vacation of office and from personally representing another person or entity for compensation during term of office before any state agency, other than judicial tribunals.

The joint resolution proposes an amendment to the Florida constitution to extend the current constitutional prohibition on legislators and statewide elected officers personally representing another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency to six years following vacation of office from two years. The joint resolution also proposes to subject appointed state officers to the same prohibition, and extend the prohibition on legislators providing personal representation for compensation before any state agency (other than judicial tribunals) to six years following vacation of office.

If passed by the Legislature, the joint resolution will be submitted to the electorate for approval or rejection at the next general election or at an earlier special election specifically authorized by law for that purpose.

The joint resolution impacts state funds to the extent the cost of placing the constitutional amendment on the ballot must be administered by the Department of State. The Department of State has not yet provided a fiscal analysis of such cost.

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Florida Constitution must be passed by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature.

The Florida Constitution requires 60 percent voter approval for passage of a proposed constitutional amendment.

I. SUBSTANTIVE ANALYSIS

A. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Present Situation

Florida Legislative Post-service Lobbying Prohibitions

The Florida Constitution prohibits legislators and statewide elected officers from personally representing¹ another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency for a period of two years following vacation of office.² This constitutional provision also prohibits legislators from personally representing another person or entity for compensation during term of office before any state agency³, other than judicial tribunals.⁴ The constitutional provision is codified in state statute as part of Florida's Code of Ethics for Public Officers and Employees (Code).⁵

In addition to these constitutional prohibitions, the Legislature has passed general law Code provisions that prohibit appointed state officers⁶ from representing another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency for a period of two years following vacation of office, and legislators from acting as lobbyists for compensation before an executive branch agency, agency official, or employee, for two years following vacation of office.⁷

The Florida Commission on Ethics (Commission) is the independent body charged with receiving and investigating sworn complaints involving Florida's constitutional and statutory ethics provisions.⁸ While the Commission receives and investigates sworn complaints, the Commission does not have the authority to impose punishment for an ethics violation.⁹ Instead, whenever the Commission finds probable cause exists that an ethics violation has occurred, the Commission is required to submit its findings, along with a recommended penalty, to the statutorily designated official who may impose punishment.¹⁰

The Commission must make such submission to the Senate President or Speaker of the House, whichever is applicable, in any case concerning a former legislator who is alleged to have violated a provision applicable to former legislators or whose alleged conduct occurred during term of office.¹¹ In the case of a former statewide elected officer or appointed state officer, the Commission is required to make such submission to the Governor.¹²

¹ Pursuant to s. 112.312(22), the term 'represent' or 'representation' means "actual physical attendance on behalf of a client in an agency proceeding, the writing of letters or filing of documents on behalf of a client, and personal communications made with the officers or employees of any agency on behalf of a client."

² Art. II, s. 8, Fla. Const.

³ Pursuant to s. 112.313(9), F.S., the term 'state agency' means "an entity of the legislative, executive, or judicial branch of state government over which the Legislature exercises plenary budgetary and statutory control."

⁴ Id.

⁵ S. 112.313(9), F.S.

⁶ Pursuant to s. 112.313(9), F.S., the term 'appointed state officer' means "any member of an appointive board, commission, committee, council, or authority of the executive or legislative branch of state government whose powers, jurisdiction, and authority are not solely advisory and include the final determination or adjudication of any personal or property rights, duties, or obligations, other than those relative to its internal operations."

⁷ S. 112.313(9), F.S.

⁸ Art. II, s. 8(f) and (i)(3), Fla. Const., and s. 112.322(1), F.S.

⁹ S. 112.324(3), F.S.

¹⁰ S. 112.324(4)-(9), F.S.

¹¹ S. 112.324(8)(e), F.S.

¹² S. 112.324(8)(d), F.S.

A former legislator, statewide elected officer, or appointed state officer, that violates one of Florida's constitutional ethics provisions or a provision of the Code may be subject to one or more of the following civil penalties:

- Public censure and reprimand
- Civil penalty up to $10,000
- Restitution¹³ any pecuniary benefits received because of the violation committed

Pursuant to statute, in any case in which a civil penalty or restitution is imposed, the Attorney General is required to bring a civil action to recover such penalty.¹⁴

Other State Post-service Lobbying Prohibitions

According to a 50-state survey conducted by the National Conference of State Legislatures, at least 34 states have enacted post-service lobbying prohibitions on former state legislators.¹⁵ Of these 34 states, 20 states¹⁶ impose a one-year prohibition, while eight states¹⁷, including Florida, impose a two-year prohibition. Out of the remaining six states, three states¹⁸ impose a ban that expires at the end of the next regular session after the legislator has vacated office, one state¹⁹ has a prohibition that expires at the end of the legislator's current term of office (in case of resignation), one state²⁰ has a prohibition lasting six months after expiration of any term of office for which the person was elected, and one state's²¹ prohibition lasts until the later of the close of the session which the legislator served or six months after leaving office.

In 2010, an Ohio state statute that imposed a one-year lobbying ban on former state assembly members was permanently enjoined by a federal district court on grounds it violated the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.²² The statute at issue prohibited former assembly members and legislative employees from lobbying the general assembly on a compensated and uncompensated basis for one-year after leaving office or employment.²³ There, a former state assembly member, who was a supporter and member of an advocacy organization, wished to represent the organization's interest before the Ohio General Assembly on an uncompensated basis. The court found the statute infringed on First Amendment protections relating to the right to peaceably assemble and to petition the government for redress of grievances, and as such, subjected the statute to strict scrutiny. While the court found the state had a compelling interest in preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption, the court found this compelling interest to be limited to compensated lobbying; as such, the court did not find the state had a compelling interest in prohibiting uncompensated lobbying.

Like many other states²⁴, Florida's ban is limited to personal representation for compensation.

Despite the injunction, however, an Ohio state statute providing a one-year prohibition on all public officials and employees from representing any person or entity in regards to a [non-legislative] matter in which they personally participated as a public official or employee remains intact.²⁵

¹³ Pursuant to s. 112.317(1)(d), F.S., the Commission may recommend that the restitution penalty be paid to the agency of the public officer or employee or to the General Revenue Fund.

Federal Legislative Post-service Lobbying Prohibitions

Federal law places certain post-service lobbying prohibitions on former members of the United States Senate and United States House of Representatives.²⁶ Specifically, former United States Senators are prohibited from lobbying either House of Congress on behalf of any other person (except the United States) for two years after vacating office.²⁷ Former United States Representatives are prohibited from lobbying either House of Congress on behalf of any other person (except the United States) for one year after vacating office.²⁸

Effect of Proposed Changes

The joint resolution proposes an amendment to the Florida constitution to extend the current constitutional prohibition on legislators and statewide elected officers personally representing another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency to six years following vacation of office from two years. The joint resolution also proposes to subject appointed state officers to the same prohibition, and extend the prohibition on legislators providing personal representation for compensation before any state agency (other than judicial tribunals) to six years following vacation of office from two years.

A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Florida Constitution must be passed by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature.

The Florida Constitution requires 60 percent voter approval for passage of a proposed constitutional amendment.

Article XI, s. 1 of the state constitution, provides for proposed changes to the constitution by the Legislature:

SECTION 1: Proposal by legislature. – Amendment of a section or revision of one or more articles, or the whole, of this constitution may be proposed by joint resolution agreed to by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature. The full text of the joint resolution and the vote of each member voting shall be entered on the journal of each house.

If passed by the Legislature, the proposed amendment must be submitted to the electors at the next general election held more than 90 days after the joint resolution is filed with the custodian of state records. A proposed amendment may be submitted to the electorate at an earlier special election if the Legislature by three-fourths vote enacts a law so providing, which is limited to a single amendment or revision.²⁹ Each proposed amendment must be published, once in the tenth week and once in the sixth week immediately preceding the week of the election, in one newspaper of general circulation in each county where a newspaper is published.³⁰

Sixty percent voter approval is required for a proposed constitutional amendment to pass.³¹ A proposed amendment or revision approved by the requisite vote of the electors is effective as an

First Amendment, United States Constitution

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in part, that “Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . . or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances.” The Fourteenth Amendment extends these prohibitions to the states.

Provisions of Florida law that regulate lobbyist activity have been challenged on grounds they violate these First Amendment protections. In Florida League of Professional Lobbyists v. Meggs, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit (11th Circuit) upheld a Florida statute that required a lobbyist hired by a principal to disclose all lobbying expenditures, whether made by the lobbyist or by the principal, and the source of funds for all such expenditures.³³ In Florida Association of Professional Lobbyists, Inc. v. Division of Legislative Information Services, the 11th Circuit upheld a Florida statute prohibiting certain ‘expenditures’ and requiring quarterly compensation reports.³⁴

At least 34 states have instituted post-service lobbying bans on state legislators. In 2010, an Ohio statute prohibiting former members of the general assembly from lobbying the general assembly for one year following vacation of office was permanently enjoined.³⁵ There, the federal district court recognized the state’s compelling interest in avoiding corruption or the appearance of corruption, but held the prohibition was not narrowly tailored to achieve that objective because it prohibited compensated and uncompensated lobbying. Florida’s lobbying ban prohibits personal representation for compensation.

Legislature.¹² In the case of a former statewide elected officer or appointed state officer, the Commission is required to make such submission to the Governor.¹³

A former legislator, statewide elected officer, or appointed state officer, that violates one of Florida's constitutional ethics provisions or a provision of the Code may be subject to one or more of the following civil penalties:

- Public censure and reprimand
- Civil penalty up to $10,000
- Restitution¹⁴ any pecuniary benefits received because of the violation committed

Pursuant to statute, in any case in which a civil penalty or restitution is imposed, the Attorney General is required to bring a civil action to recover such penalty.¹⁵

Other State Post-service Lobbying Prohibitions

According to a 50-state survey conducted by the National Conference of State Legislatures, at least 34 states have enacted post-service lobbying prohibitions on former state legislators.¹⁶ Of these 34 states, 20 states¹⁷ impose a one-year prohibition, while eight states¹⁸, including Florida, impose a two-year prohibition. Out of the remaining six states, three states¹⁹ impose a ban that expires at the end of the next regular session after the legislator has vacated office, one state²⁰ has a prohibition that expires at the end of the legislator's current term of office (in case of resignation), one state²¹ has a prohibition lasting six months after expiration of any term of office for which the person was elected, and one state's²² prohibition lasts until the later of the close of the session which the legislator served or six months after leaving office.

In 2010, an Ohio state statute that imposed a one-year lobbying ban on former state assembly members was permanently enjoined by a federal district court on grounds it violated the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.²³ The statute at issue prohibited former assembly members and legislative employees from lobbying the general assembly on a compensated and uncompensated basis for one-year after leaving office or employment.²⁴ There, a former state assembly member, who was a supporter and member of an advocacy organization, wished to represent the organization's interest before the Ohio General Assembly on an uncompensated basis. The court found the statute infringed on First Amendment protections relating to the right to peaceably assemble and to petition the government for redress of grievances, and as such, subjected the statute to strict scrutiny. While the court found the state had a compelling interest in preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption, the court found this compelling interest to be limited to compensated lobbying; as such, the court did not find the state had a compelling interest in prohibiting uncompensated lobbying.

Like many other states²⁵, Florida's ban is limited to personal representation for compensation.

¹³ S. 112.324(8)(d), F.S.

¹⁴ Pursuant to s. 112.317(1)(d), F.S., the Commission may recommend that the restitution penalty be paid to the agency of the public officer or employee or to the General Revenue Fund.

Federal Legislative Post-service Lobbying Prohibitions

Federal law places certain post-service lobbying prohibitions on former members of the United States Senate and United States House of Representatives.²⁷ Specifically, former United States Senators are prohibited from lobbying either House of Congress on behalf of any other person (except the United States) for two years after vacating office.²⁸ Former United States Representatives are prohibited from lobbying either House of Congress on behalf of any other person (except the United States) for one year after vacating office.²⁹

Effect of Proposed Changes

The bill amends general law to extend the current prohibition on legislators, statewide elected officers, and appointed state officers, representing another person or entity for compensation before their former government body or agency to six years following vacation of office from two years.

The bill also amends general law to extend the prohibition on legislators lobbying the executive branch to six years following vacation of office from two years.

First Amendment, United States Constitution

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in part, that “Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . . or the right of the people to peaceably assemble, and to petition the government for redress of grievances.” The Fourteenth Amendment extends these prohibitions to the states.

Provisions of Florida law that regulate lobbyist activity have been challenged on grounds they violate these First Amendment protections. In Florida League of Professional Lobbyists v. Meggs, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit (11th Circuit) upheld a Florida statute that required a lobbyist hired by a principal to disclose all lobbying expenditures, whether made by the lobbyist or by the principal, and the source of funds for all such expenditures.³⁰ In Florida Association of Professional Lobbyists, Inc. v. Division of Legislative Information Services, the 11th Circuit upheld a Florida statute prohibiting certain ‘expenditures’ and requiring quarterly compensation reports.³¹

At least 34 states have instituted post-service lobbying bans on state legislators. In 2010, an Ohio statute prohibiting former members of the general assembly from lobbying the general assembly for one year following vacation of office was permanently enjoined.³² There, the federal district court recognized the state’s compelling interest in avoiding corruption or the appearance of corruption, but held the prohibition was not narrowly tailored to achieve that objective because it prohibited compensated and uncompensated lobbying. Florida’s lobbying ban prohibits personal representation for compensation.
